Jueki Stools

Jonathan Rowell

Jueki's form and namesake originate from the viscous, sweet sap that flows from a tree. Its four legs appear to pull away from the softly curved seat, without disturbance or force. The effect is highlighted in its underside, in the way the wood grain appears to flow downward. The leg ends round slightly as they meet the floor, like the final drippings of the sap itself. A steel support loop echoes the seat's silhouette and provides an additional level of structural integrity.
